Åsa is a Principal Consultant at the Institute of Public Care. Her career over 35 years has spanned a variety of social care roles and settings including both local and central government. This has included significant senior management experience in children's services, with a particular focus on performance management, strategy and commissioning.

As well as substantial local authority experience, Åsa has chaired and served on regional groups as well as working on national programmes with a range of authorities. She has a strong commitment to partnership working to improve outcomes and is well versed in working with services users as well as staff, senior managers, elected members and civil servants.

She has a wealth of experience in undertaking service reviews and transformation projects with a firm commitment to continuous service improvement. This has included extensive work in relation to the commissioning of looked after children's services and services for children with disabilities, as well as management responsibility for a commissioning and contracting service in a large shire county.

As a Principal Consultant with IPC Åsa has provided bespoke consultancy support for local authority children's services and their partner agencies across England and Wales. She is currently a tutor on IPC's Team Manager Development Programme.

Åsa is a graduate in social work from Örebro University, Sweden, a registered social worker and has an MSc in Public Sector Management from Aston University Business School. She also holds a Certificate of Performance in Coaching Practice.
